Unpacking the Burden of Maternal Exhaustion

Our child psychologists and community facilitators discovered that before teaching positive parenting techniques, we had to hold space for the mothers own emotional burdens. In urban slum settlements, many mothers reported that our circle was the very first time someone asked how they were feeling.

Evolving Gender Dynamics & Paternal Engagement

Childcare in low-income settlements is traditionally considered women domestic work. By piloting weekend evening sessions and engaging male community leaders, we initiated dialogues on shared domestic caregiving, leading to our upcoming "Pita-Charcha" father engagement initiative.
